State of Work 2018

More than ever, today's work is in flux. Each year creates a slew of new business apps—technology replacing outdated solutions like filing cabinets and spreadsheets. This transformation revolutionizes work by increasing automation, but it also comes with a new set of problems. Functions and teams often become disconnected and fail to execute together, work processes operate at different paces across a single organization, and data is trapped in silos, creating a digital work crisis.

Workfront explores these issues in the annual State of Work Report—now in its fifth year. In this annual report Workfront surveyed more than 2,000 knowledge workers in the US and more than 2,000 workers in the UK to better understand current views on work. The survey gathered hundreds of data points and found a workforce that believes their work matters but often finds themselves frustrated by the changes that come with digital transformation.
